little over a month ago the whole country read obout the disappearance of Annie Fredericks from her home in Laure! Run. The village of Laurel Run is at the foot of the Wilkesbarre Mountain. It is a mountain of dense forest and covers an area of hundred; of miles. Portions of it have

Bears and other wild animals are numerous. When little Annie was first missed from her home the supposition was that she had wardered into the woods and got lost. A searching party was at once organized. For three days they searched the mountain but could find no trace of the missing girl.

Then the father heard that a band of gypsies had camped on the outskirts of the mountain, and that it was possible that they had kidnapped Annie. The gypsies had taken their departure two days before A posee was organized and the gypsies were pursued on horseback They were over-Fredericke's little daughter was not smoog them. When the posse returned without the girl. Mr. Fredericks determined to make another search of the mountain. He organ zed a hig party, mostly his neighbors, and said he would give every man $2 for each day spent in the woods. He mortgaged his little home in order to raise

The members of the party, however, refused to take a cent from the grief-stricken father. As most of those composing the searching party were working people, it was determined to start on the search early Sun-day morning so that the men could get back to work on Monday.

Accordingly, at 5 o'clock on a bright Sabbath morn, five weeks ago, 800 people started out to find the girl. Each carried his own provisions. The party was divided into equads of a dozen or more. Before night the best part of the mountain was traversed.

Just before dusk the advance guard of the searching party returned. They had no tidings of the girl. All night long women and children waited at the foot of the mountain for news. Stragglers from the searching party returned every hour.

They were weary and footsore. They had
